

Stepping Stones

by The Learning Project

Stepping Stones by The Learning Project is a new debriefing tool that assists participants to reflect on and analyze the experiences they felt, share different perspectives, and process new learning into their conceptual framework.

Stepping Stones can be used at any time during a program to process experiences from challenge by choice activities, team building exercises and role play. The use of Stepping Stones is only limited by the creativity of the program leader.

Stepping Stones provides 40 questions for use in self-reflection and evaluation. It comes in a durable waterproof container. Ideal for carrying in your pocket or backpack.

Some examples on how to use Stepping Stones:

- 1) The program leader chooses a card; everyone is asked to respond to the question.
- 2) All the cards are out on a table; participants choose one, or more, that they feel best relates to the experience/session that they have been part of; encouraged to think about a response; be prepared to share the question(s) and their response with the group; each person shares their question(s) and response(s).
- 3) 10 participants in the group, each receives 4 cards at random. Participants are instructed to select the question that they feel best relates to the experience/session that they have been part of; think about a response; be prepared to share it with the group; each participant shares their question and response in turn.
